

1. biodegradable	able to be broken down by the action of living organisms such as bacteria
2. composite packages	packaging made from two or more different packaging material types which are fused together in a single unit and cannot be separated by the consumer
3. corporate nutrition policy	a document which sets out the nutritional strategies the company will use when developing food products, conducting research and development and marketing to the consumer
4. genetically modified	food that contains material derived from an organism that has had its genetic material altered in some way other than by conventional breeding
5. head space	the small amount of space left in all cans and other containers to allow for expansion of the product during heating
6. home meal replacements	food products not prepared in the home